

Pleasurable's Strategy for Handling Risks and Challenges

We will use several strategies to deal with the risks and challenges that we will face in executing our project.

1. To respect individual limitations among members of our group, we will use group communication across project areas to assign tasks and communicate about capacity. Group communication enables everyone to be up-to-date on projects, so we can make adjustments as necessary and step in for each other when needed.
2. We also have a contingency plan, which is mentioned in COVID-19 contingency plans, if members become unavailable for an extended time.
3. Due to ongoing changes in our capacity, each video in our resource library will be designed to stand alone, so content can be developed by individual members when we are each able to work.
4. With the recognition of the risks of putting information online in a public space and our limitations, we will develop a clear policy on the difference between peer advice and medical advice to ensure that there is no confusion about what we can provide.
5. We will have clear disclaimers that we do not mean to speak for all disabled experiences and are not liable for issues associated with using or acting upon information in our material.
6. When appropriate, we will encourage personal consultations with the relevant professionals, such as a licensed medical provider.
7. Further, our team is encouraged not to share personal, identifying or health information concerning Pleasurable unless willing to accept any potential harm that may result from sharing. Team members are also encouraged to remove ourselves from "people databases" and use tools to prevent or mitigate identity tracking.
